Some of you, no doubt, have heard me grumbling about the Streetscapes website after some recent issues. I'm happy to announce that some of the basic features have been restored. Here's a quick guide to the "Catalog" section of the Streetscapes website.

Go to the Streetscapes Home Page and Select "Catalog". A drop down menu appears. Select "Products" and each product in the catalog is listed individually by product name without limitation of how many items can be displayed. That's true of all the other tabs listed in the drop down menu. If you're a visual person, it's a good way to get an overview of all the products in that section.

Select the "Manufacturer" tab and each manufacturer listed in the catalog will be displayed. Select a manufacturer's name and that manufacturer's products are displayed by product type. Select the "Collections" tab to display matching families of products. Select the "Price Matrix" tab to list the products by price point.

The "Market" tab is a quick search section for products related to a specific type of project. For example, if you're looking for bus or transit related products, select the "Bus and Transit" tab to display all of the bus and transit related products.

The "Specialties" tab list products with specific characteristics. For example, the stainless steel tab displays all of the stainless steel products in the catalog. The product names have also been revised to make the "Search" feature more user friendly.

Let us know if you find the web site easier to use. Your ideas and suggestions are welcome and appreciated.

We'd like your feedback.

We're interested in some information. Have you identified any products that could be used in public spaces to engage kids and teens? Are there products that you're interested in but find hard to source? Do you have any suggestions or ideas on how to elevate furniture and site amenities as an important tool to activate public spaces?
